Education is very important for us to gather knowledge and skills that we need for our everyday lives. Within every school, there is at least one student who has transferred from one school to another. The phenomenon of transferee students is common and natural to most schools every school year because there are lots of possible reasons why some students have to move from a school to another. This can impact their personal, social, and even their academic lives.

This phenomenological study was conducted to describe the life and experiences of each participant in this study while they took their journey on transferring at a new school.

The main sources of data were from the unstructured interview with the selected participants in Gen. E. Aguinaldo National High School (Bailen). Litchman's 3cs of qualitative data analysis was done to analyze and interpret the data for the study.

The three themes emerged from the experiences are: The Seed, The Calamities, and The Growers or Fertilizers.

This document is a partial fulfillment of the requirements for the subject Educational Research I has been examined and is recommended for acceptance and approval.
